Other information:

Until his retirement in June 2011, Tom Genovese had been the Florida Keys Service Center Director for the South Florida Water Management District since October 2008. He started his career with the District in 2001 as Director of the Orlando Service Center. Prior to joining the District he was a Senior Project Manager with Walt Disney Imagineering where he led environmental planning and permitting efforts for the Walt Disney World Resort and Town of Celebration. His 38-year career also includes service as Vice President of Planning Services for a major Florida planning and engineering consulting firm, Director of Planning for one of South Florida's largest homebuilders, and Assistant Director of the South Florida Regional Planning Council. Tom holds a Bachelor's Degree in Management from the University of Michigan, a Master's in Regional Planning from the University of Michigan School of Natural Resources, and a MBA from Nova-Southeastern University.
